

The Pitt Political Review

SPRING 2012

- The Pitt Political Review is dedicated to rigorous discussion of political science, economics, international affairs, and politics on the local, national, and global levels. The Review publishes writing that analyzes issues, events, and personalities, assuming nothing of the reader but a common interest in the subject. Our goal is to contribute to the lively political discourse at Pitt and beyond.

You are currently holding (or viewing, if you are currently on our website ppr.pitt.edu) the first special edition of PPR. Our writers have delved into elections politics for this edition, analyzing new campaigning trends, evaluating rhetoric from both major parties, and scrutinizing enigmatic politicians who have become prominent figures in American politics. Although the articles cover a wide range of topics, all of them address in some way the importance of upholding traditions of transparent and productive discourse throughout the circus that an election season can sometimes become. We at the Review have tried creating this forum for discussion and debate; please help us continue that practice by contributing to the discussion at pittpoliticalreview@gmail.com.

The Pitt Political Review is a publication of the University of Pittsburgh Honors College, which is published online by the University Library System of the University of Pittsburgh. The staff of the Review thanks Dean Edward Stricker, Karen Billingsley, and the staff of the UHC and ULS for making publication of the Review possible. Furthermore, we extend our deepest gratitude to our faculty advisor, Cindy Skrzycki, a senior lecturer in the English Department.
